A NIKKEI EXPERIENCE

PISCO STORY

“Meet tequila’s sexy cousin, Pisco!”

Pisco is mysterious. It’s not as flashy as tequila or as noir as vodka. It’s not made from cacti or potatoes. Surprisingly, it’s made from grapes.

In Peru, Pisco is produced using copper pot stills, like single malt and Scotch whiskies, rather than continuous stills like most vodkas. Unlike the Chilean variety, Peruvian pisco is never diluted after it is distilled and enters the bottle directly at its distillation strength. It takes between eight – twelve kilograms of grapes to make enough pisco to fill a regular bottle, depending on the grape variety used. It is a clear spirit (unlike brandy, normally barrel-aged).

So what is Pisco’s origin? The oldest reference to the word Pisco is from 1764. Many historians claim the word comes from the town of Pisco on the southern coast of Peru, which is known for its viniculture and has been for several centuries. Wine is still produced in the valley of Pisco and the name is derived from the indigenous Quecha language. The interpretation of the Quecha meaning of Pisco is known as “bird”.

“Move over tequila – it’s time for pisco to shine!”

Peruvian pisco must be made in one of the country’s five official D.O. (Denomination of Origin) departments – Lima, Ica, Arequipa, Moquegua and Tacna (only in the valleys of Locumba, Sama and Caplina), which were established in 1991 by the government. This regulation also emerged four distinct types of pisco.

PURO (PURE): Made from a single variety of grape, mostly Quebranta, although Mollar or common black are also used. No blending between varieties is accepted!

AROMÁTICAS (AROMATIC): Made from Muscat or Muscat-derived grape varieties, as well as Albilla, Italia and Torontel grapes. Again, the pisco should only contain one variety of grape.

MOSTO VERDE (GREEN MUST): Distilled from partially fermented must, this pisco must be distilled before the fermentation process has completely transformed sugars into alcohol.

At Inti we offer our favorite Pisco brand by BarSol and we have the following variety: Quebranta - Strong with apple, green mango and toasted aromas.

THE PERFECT BALANCE OF LIQUOR, CITRUS, BITTERS & SWEETNESS

Celebrating Pisco, Peru's national drink, has turned into Inti's obsession. It started with the Pisco sour, a cocktail invented in the early 1920s in Lima, the capital of Peru.

A great pisco sour has the perfect balance of liquor, citrus, bitters and sweetness, but we wanted to go one better and started infusing our piscos by steeping fruits in the liquor for weeks at a time. We now offer flavored piscos ranging from passion fruit to strawberry to hibiscus and purple corn.
